It is 8:30 a.m. – we are entering the premises of Burch, together with groups of students sparkling with cheerfulness and good humor. Regardless of the weather conditions or the time of the day, once you enter Burch you feel the entire place is bathed in spring sunshine. The feeling of close-knit family warmth overwhelms you.

Everything having been carefully prepared marks the outset of the most important part of a working day: the time spent in the classroom. Classroom, a magnificent place for gaining, sharing and demonstrating knowledge, where students are encouraged to broaden their horizons, express their thoughts, respect their and accept other's points of view. Of course, the spell of this demanding but rewarding profession is not confined to any room, but is present all around.

All around you feel the homelike atmosphere. No matter whose door you open, a friendly face of a colleague is the first thing you will see. Colleagues are here always ready to develop, share and enhance constructive ideas – with a cup of tea, or coffee, of course. No problem arises as an insurmountable obstacle for an enthusiastic team comprised of hard working Burch students and professors, who successfully deal with all issues as they come up.

It is 5:00 p.m. – the life at Burch is slowly fading, and we are leaving its premises, aware that this place, together with all of us, is the hallmark in the lives of so many young people who have been the part of our family.
